Your course evaluation report consists of the following sections:

Response Averages: The average across all, or a group of questions with comparisons to your division, department, subject code, and the evaluation instrument used. This section only encompasses the Likert scale items on the evaluation.

Instructor Personalized Question Responses (where applicable): breakdown of responses and comments from these questions.

Free Response Question Answers

Comparisons: This section shows a comparison of individual question scores for the course and the department for the Likert scale questions. Some questions will also display a comparison to the division, subject code, and the evaluation instrument used when this data is appropriate. This section does not include questions about the student's performance or experience.

Question Response Breakdowns: This section provides further statistical information as well as a breakdown of all responses received from all questions that were not free response.

A Note on Average and Comparison Labels: Please note that all values are based on the primary (owning/sponsoring) section for cross-listed courses.

Division: An average for the division within the College that the course belongs to.

Department: An average for the department the course belongs to.

Subject Code: An average for the subject code under which the courses is taught.

Evaluation Instrument: An average for all courses using the same question set as this course.

Course: This specific section of the course.

How did the diversity of your classmates contribute to your learning in this course?

Comments

It helped

The diversity of having both men and women was helpful, but our opinions as liberal and mostly white demographic was not as beneficial.

While we did not have a very diverse class in terms of race/ethnicity, we were able to have frank discussions about these topics. Relying on personal experiences as well as hearing from some of the few minority (in terms of race/ethnicity) voices, I think my classmates and I were able to get at some real issues and make our way towards truths. My classmates were also able to bring up diverse opinions, which helped us tackle questions from different angles and not be led wholly by confirmation bias.

How might the class climate be made more inclusive of diverse students?

Comments

IDK

I'm not sure

While I am not sure how the department or an instructor could actually "increase diversity" in the class (have more students of different backgrounds), I do think an effort can be made to explain that the class, regardless of whether most of the students are of a certain race or lean one way politically, should address and think about a problem from different perspectives (of race, political ideology, sex, gender, etc). One of the things we talked about in my feminist philosophy class with Joanna that my classmates felt was important to "getting at truths" is being able to understand where certain beliefs come from and why they are held by some people. I think it is impossible to have a completely diverse class (it simply is the truth that most people at UNC lean politically left, often most of the class consists of people of white backgrounds, etc.), but if your goal is to be more inclusive of diverse students (or at least diverse opinions), then I think the key will be to make it clear that "devil's advocate positions" should be respected and taken just as seriously as personal opinions.

Pretty good 10/10 would philosophize again

It was great

This was a great course! I learned a lot and I think I really benefitted from taking a class on a topic that I had never really studied academically in depth before. It is unfortunate that feminism courses can often be slighted as unimportant or anti-men (at least in the community that I come from), neither of which I think are true. As for Joanna's work on this particular course, I really enjoyed her variety of teaching methods and inclusion of readings, poetry, videos, etc. to help us understand the topics better. One random note: while I enjoyed our readings for the "Chicana" section, I think looking for another piece that perhaps goes a little more in depth (and is more current) with regards to the specific (female) Mexican American experience would have helped us have a more productive discussion on that particular day.

Comments

Wow! What a great teacher. Joanna is one of the most intelligent women I have met (seriously). Maybe I feel this way because philosophers are so clear cut and bold with their arguments? Not sure – this was my very first philosophy course. What I am most appreciative of is how much I believe my writing has improved after taking this course. I should be clear: I PRIDE myself on my writing ability, but Joanna has really, really helped me think about how to make better arguments and write better essays. She doesn't give you an A for making a great effort or having a (poorly argued) brilliant idea; she slams you hard with your first try, gives you helpful feedback, and rewards you with an A if you actually have demonstrated good argumentation and writing skills. I wish more of my English professors actually criticized my writing in my essays and then gave me a chance to edit and improve them. (Phil department, give them a hint will ya?) If I take one thing away from this class to improve my writing, it's this: "Make every sentence count. There's enough BS in the world."
